SUSTAINABLE SHEA PARKLAND CONSERVATION THROUGH BEEKEEPING IN THE NORTH GONJA DISTRICT OF GHANA.

Key Words: Shea, Women, economic security, social inclusion, Land, Parkland, Climate Change, Environment, Conservation, beekeeping, Shea nuts, incomes.

Background: The Shea tree is the main source of Shea kernel or nuts which is the basic raw material for Shea based food, confectionaries and cosmetic industry globally. The collection of the Shea kernels is the source of livelihood for over 900,000 rural poor women in the Shea belt of Ghana. Yet, decisions regarding the tenure of the Shea trees which are naturally grown resource are in the hands of men in a patriarchal male dominant land inheritance system. The exclusion of women from the decisions regarding the tenure of Shea trees has resulted in rapid decline in Shea tree population due to negative human activities such as large track of land with Shea trees been sold out by men Chiefs which results in cutting down of the trees. To address this gap, an advocacy project with the objective of increasing the participation of marginalized women and the excluded social groups in the long term decision making on Shea resource and parkland management for sustainable investment was implemented in the 12 districts including the north Gonja district. The advocacy action by the women has resulted in community chiefs creating Shea parklands for women groups to manage and protect the Shea trees. The advocacy project stated was funded by Star Ghana with funding from Ukaid, DANIDA and the European (EU).

Challenge: The advocacy action stated above did not include parkland management practices in post creation of the Shea parklands as a service project to ensure they are sustainably managed.

Strategy:

Shea nut picking is a one season activity annually. To ensure that the women groups have regular engagement with the Shea parkland to manage the trees and conserve them, this project seeks to incorporate beekeeping venture in the parklands to enable the women realize double benefits.

Impact of the Project:

150 women members of the group will have increased incomes, keeping sustainable jobs and creating opportunities for mutual benefits between the Shea trees and honey bees through pollination.
